

Anne Dromeda: “Collision with the Milky Way” (street date: 4th of november 2016)

Collision with the Milky Way – Psychedelic Chanson on the debut album of Anne Dromeda

In the far future, 4 billion years to be more precise, the Andromeda galaxy is going to crash into the Milky Way in which our Earth is located. A stellar collision of monumental proportions and still, Andromeda doesn't seem to change its course. This eventual encounter gives the incentive for a debut album from Austria: “The eponymous song ‘Collision with the Milky Way’ tells the tale, of how Andromeda has got to be madly in love with the Milky Way.”, says the singer and guitarist Anne Dromeda, names herself after said galaxy and creates a new genre for herself: “I am currently describing my music as ‘Psychedelic Chanson’.”.

Anne Dromeda's songs are about deceleration, attraction and also about submersion – maybe into space? Or simply into music, just as the young songwriter does. Lyrics and music on the CD have been written by her – and together with the bassist Victor Gabriel (of Gasmac Gilmore and others), the pianist Marie-Therese Goiser and Klaus Wutscher on the Mandolin they developed playful arrangements for the songs. The album was recorded and produced by Jürgen Plank (of Erstes Wiener Heimorgelorchester, The Wichita and others).

Anne Dromeda originates from Lower Austria and moved to Vienna to receive an education in Musical and Operetta, including tuition in singing, dancing and acting. “Especially actresses of the old Film Noir fascinate me.”, she says – and therefore produced a matching video for her song “Cinema Noir”, filmed in part at the exclusive Viennese hotel Sans Souci.

“Collision with the Milky Way” is going to shorten our wait for the end of the world in a pleasant way – music for a possible eternity.
